

In need of distant medical care?

We can help you get there.

The Air Care Alliance is a nonprofit public service organization supporting the work of charitable aviation organizations whose members fly to help others.

How does it work?

Finding a flight starts with us.

The Air Care Alliance is a starting point for patients and others in need. We represent a network of charitable aviation organizations throughout the U.S.

Individuals complete a flight request on our website and we connect you directly with a member organization that can help.

ACA members are qualified, non-profit charitable organizations that arrange free flights through volunteer pilots who fly private aircraft, or through commercial airline partners.

Who can we help?

Flights are available to those who require distant care, including:

- Specialized surgery or treatment
- Pre-Transplant or Post-Transplant appointments
- Diagnosis/treatment of a rare condition
- Pediatric specialties
- Clinical trials
- A second opinion
- Other compelling reasons

About the flights

How does one qualify?

Passengers must:

- Be medically stable
- Be ambulatory
- Be able to sit upright for the duration of the flight
- Have a verifiable medical need
- Have a financial need or other compelling circumstances

Where is flight service available?

ACA organizations service the entire United States. Because pilots are flying smaller private aircraft, they are able to utilize small airports. This means they can pick up passengers at an airport near their home or treatment facility, even if the passenger lives in a rural area or far from commercial service.

Flights are FREE

Flights are arranged by charitable organizations through volunteer pilots who fly their own private aircraft. These pilots donate their time, resources, and piloting skills to make critically needed travel possible without any cost to you.

How can I request a flight?

You can submit a flight request through our online referral system at www.aircarealliance.org.
